"I was really not convinced that she would be able to wear it because ... it's very heavy," Guo said. "But she later told me 'This piece of clothing is so beautiful' (and) that ... she gained the courage (to wear it). I really admired that."

"We also discussed the need for transparency, especially when we have an increased military presence along our borders... for NATO it is important to do whatever we can to avoid that incidents are spiraling out of control," he told reporters.

The BBC's Nomsa Maseko, in Johannesburg, says the tennis champion has also been ordered to pay a fine to the South African Department of Justice, which will help fund its campaigns against sexual abuse.

Nearly a week after the derailment, it remains a mystery what caused the train to accelerate from 70 miles per hour (113 km per hour) to 106 mph (171 kph) in the minute before the crash. Authorities have not yet ruled out equipment malfunction, human error or other possible reasons for the train gaining speed so rapidly.

Dillingham said his clients have endured significant suffering because of the forced probes. "Although it was stated in orientation it was voluntary, it became increasingly clear it was not. This is a very expensive program, these are young women. " I'm not a doctor but they have suffered significant psychological damage," Dillingham said.

A small rise in core euro zone inflation, meanwhile, was offset by the UK where it turned negative for the first timesince the 1960's. That knocked sterling as it fell fora third straight day against a broadly stronger dollar.

Only a quarter of workers worldwide now have a "stable employment relationship," according to a new report by the International Labour Organization. It found that the rest are employed on a temporary or short-term basis, work in informal jobs without contracts, or in unpaid family jobs.

While we also want accountable care organizations to succeed, we question whether the scant evidence reported in the studies justifies such a large public investment in time and money. The studies may have unfairly compared pre-selected, high performing pioneer accountable care organizations with less experienced and less selective controls. This is akin to comparing baseball's all-star teams to a team made up of the players not even considered for that honor.

"For example, bed-sharing families might be more likely to report wheezing because they are more attentive or aware of their children's breathing. Alternatively, families might perceive wheezing as problematic and as something that could lead to sleep problems, which might in turn elicit bed-sharing to better monitor these problems," he said.
Most people with this injury complained that they feel it particularly upon arising from bed in the morning or after sitting for a long while. With the weight off your feet, the plantar fascia starts to heal but as soon as you put weight on to your foot the torn fibers will be pulled apart and the arch collapses and you have more pain.

"Being bullied is not a harmless rite of passage or an inevitable part of growing up. It has serious long-term consequences. It is important for schools, health services and other agencies to work together to reduce bullying and the adverse effects related to it," Prof Wolke added.
